A Brief Introduction to Map Collections at the Library of Congress

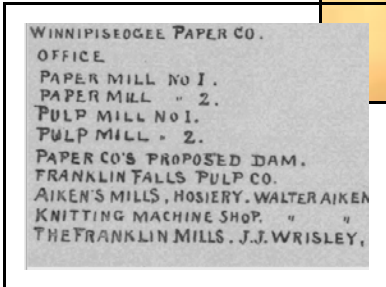

Maps are valuable treasures. But have you ever viewed a real "Treasure" map? If not, and you'd like to, you will want to visit the map collection at the Library of Congress (LOC). Their map collection includes several "Treasure" maps—sites of shipwrecks, ghost towns, lost or abandoned mines, and frontier forts.

Millions of maps and charts are among the cartographic treasures of the Library of Congress (LOC) in Washington, D.C. This very brief introduction is intended to whet the reader's appetite and encourage the reader to explore the vast collection of maps, atlases and gazetteers available at the LOC. The primary focus of the LOC map collection is on Americana.

Most maps and atlases are located within the Geography and Map Division of the LOC. Many of the images have been digitized and placed on line <www.loc.gov>. The "Bird's-eye View" immediately to the right was copied from an online image of the original (35 x 50 cm) which carries the call number G3744.F7A3 1884.W4 at the LOC. Panoramic, or "Bird's-eye View," maps—generally provide an aerial perspective of communities.

Our family histories should include maps of the areas in which our predecessors resided; maps of detailing their migration. In this brief introduction let me focus on two special collections:

Explorers' Maps—generally designate routes (waterways, trails, and roads) used by early frontiersmen and our adventuresome ancestors as they migrated to new locations. Some of the "Explorer" maps available at the LOC are for the Chisholm Trail, Pony Express Route, Natchez Trace, and the Old Chicago Road.

Bird's-eye view drawn by H. Wellge and published in Brockton, Mass in 1884. The print includes an index to points of interest in Franklin Falls in 1856 (see portion enlarged on the left).

Sanborn Fire Maps—The Sanborn Map Company produced thousands of fire insurance maps beginning about 1867, which were used to evaluate risk factors valuable in setting insurance premium rates. The maps show intricate details including the location of residential, commercial, and industrial buildings for nearly 12,000 cities and towns. Data often

1880 Alabama Soundex ~ Part II

The following abstracts of Woodward (including spelling variations) found in the 1880 Alabama (Code W363, National Archives micropublication T734, reel 69) are continued from WOODWARDs WeSearch Vol. 8 No. 4 (July 2000). The abstracts are in the same order in which they appear on the microfilm.

A word of caution—remember that in 1880 only families with at least one child age ten or younger were indexed and currently there is no comprehensive index for all Alabama families.

The 1900 South Dakota Soundex

The following are abstracts of Woodwards (including spelling variations) found in the 1900 South Dakota Soundex (Code W363), National Archives micropublication T1071, reel 42. The abstracts are in the same order in which they appear on the microfilm. The data for each family includes; name; relationship to head of house; birth month and year; age; birth place; and the name of family enumerated with where applicable. These entries are followed by County of residence; ED (enumeration District), and Sheet number. The term "n.r." indicates the information was not recorded; and "e/w," enumerated with. Race has not been included in the abstracts since all principle individuals were designated as White.

The Woodward Homestead at Newton, Mass.

Contributed by Mark A. Davis

Attending national genealogical conferences has often been my catalyst to head cross-country by auto, visiting obscure cemeteries and distant cousins. So naturally, as the National Genealogical Societies Conference of the States approached this year, I began planning out a zigzag route from Indiana to Rhode Island.

It was a rainy Sunday morning in May when I picked up my genealogy buddy, Bev Petersen, and we headed east. After a quick stop to visit friends in Pennsylvania, we headed north through New York. We crossed over the boarder into Vermont with the sole purpose of allowing Bev to visit her fiftieth state. After a toast and a quick photo-op, we headed south to the home of my cousins, Walt and Catherine Woodward of Carlisle, Massachusetts.

I am Walt's third cousin, once removed. I grew up knowing many generations of my Woodward cousins. However, Walter's branch of the family had been raised in the Detroit area, physically far removed from our family get-togethers in central Illinois. Eventually Walter settled in the Boston area and it was not until the last ten years that he and I became acquainted. Thanks to Walt's keen interest in history and my obsession with genealogy, we have generated reams of correspondences.

The Woodward's live a stone throw from Concord and Lexington; their home setting among the stone row fences and densely forested woods. Upon our afternoon arrival, Catherine served tea while Walt made arrangements for a surprise adventure. Just before the dinner hour, we joined Walt for a drive to Newton, Massachusetts for a tour of the Woodward homestead.

I don't know about your neck of the woods, but in northern Indiana we classify a historical home as anything older than indoor plumbing! New England's truly ancient homes can be somewhat overwhelming, in both age and quantity. The home we were headed to sits on a large urban lot in middle-class Newton, just off of Woodward Street.

The rambling wood clad house seems somewhat out of place among the newer homes in the area. It looks a little neglected, perhaps a little tired... as well it should, having been built over 300 years ago. To understand the history of this home, you need to understand the ancestry. The first Woodward to occupy the home was John³ Woodward, born 1649 in Watertown, MA. John was the son of George², born 1621 at Ipswich, England and the grandson of Richard¹, born 1589 in Ipswich, the original immigrant in this line. Walt and I are descended from John's brother Daniel.

From the deeds of Middlesex we find the following entry "1681, Richard Robbins, of Cambridge, to John Woodward, weaver, and his wife Rebecca, daughter of said Robbins; north by a way leading to the Lower Falls south by Charles River; east by land of Squire Pelham; and west by Thomas Crosswell." This represented the beginning of the longest recorded hereditary occupation of a home in America. To the original thirty acres, John added 75 more acres in 1686. In later generations the farm would grow to 300 acres. The home would remain in the family for ten generations, until it was finally sold from the family in the 1960's.

The home is currently owned by Joseph Weiler, Professor at Harvard University. Though on sabbatical in Israel when we visited, we were taken on tour by the house sitter, with Dr. Weiler's long distance permission.

Mark A. Davis and Walter Woodward in the 'original kitchen lean-to' viewing the framed original deeds to the property

The old dwelling is remarkably unchanged since the Woodward occupation. Indeed, the home appears to have changed very little in the last century. The city of Newton assessed the property and home at nearly a half million dollars in value, which I'm told is average for the 'middle class' neighborhood.

It is said by the family that Ralph Waldo Emerson was a frequent visitor at the Woodward home when he lived across the road in the Bethuel-Allen house. As we approach the house, you can almost feel the steps Emerson must have taken to reach the door.

We walked around the outside of the property, viewing the facades that represented three centuries of additions. The original 1680's home appeared relatively intact up to the point where a later, larger, wing was attached. The family recorded that one of the additions dated back to 1729. On the side of the original structure was a lean-to room that appears to have been built near the time of the original structure. During renovations in the twentieth century, 20½" wide pine board paneling was discovered under six layers of wall paper.

In the 1880's the 'Circuit Railroad' began cutting a path through the Waban area. The original path would have taken it through the middle of the Woodward house. Thanks to the efforts of Samuel N. Woodward, the railroad makes a gentle curve around the house. Since that time, the front of the home faces what has become the side yard.

The house has settled in odd ways over the years, leaving a less than plumb structure. Jetting from the roof of the old home is the massive chimney that is so typical of colonial homes. Unfortunately, most of the old windows have been interchanged with new vinyl clad replacements.

We entered the home via the kitchen entrance in a newer wing. The room was massive, and by the appearance of the large brick fireplace in the middle of the room it must be a very old addition. The ceiling height was comfortable, the room light and airy. We moved from the kitchen into the old section of the house.

Here the ceilings were low for my 6'2" frame. The room we entered was currently being used as a dining room. The old fireplace was beautiful, the original wide plank panels and doors framing it. I could imagine the thousands of times Woodward's have stood at the hearth warming themselves on cold winter days.

From this room we moved past the original front door to the home. A stairwell rises to the second floor. When the home was originally built, there was only a ladder through a trap door in the ceiling. At night, the occupants would pull the ladder up and latch the door in an effort to protect them from Indians. We made our way past the stairs into what the Weiler's use as an office. This smaller room would have originally been larger, having been dissected for the stairwell. I stood next to an old original door, hand crafted from pine boards. The hinges and latches dated from the 1600's and were made of hand hammered iron. The doors and hardware had never been painted during all these years and I couldn't resist putting my fingers on the latch, savoring the touch that so many generations had taken for granted.

We passed through a small door into the lean-to that was referred to as the original kitchen. The room was long and narrow, with very low ceilings that caused me to stoop. I can only describe the overall condition of the room as garage like. The Weiler's used the room for storage, dozens of boxes and a motorcycle shared the room with years of dust and cobwebs. But this ancient room proved to be a goldmine of Woodward history. The walls were covered with dozens of old framed photographs of the great house along side photographs of some of it's occupants.

In several photos you could view the house in more prosperous times, with ladies in long dresses and men with straw hats. From the oldest photos you could trace the changes in the house from the 1870's through the 1940s. Just to the left of the brick fire place hung two large wooden frames. Behind the dirty glass we viewed the original deeds for the property, dating from 1681 and 1686. The documents were done in a spidery handwriting, the dark ink still brilliant on the yellowed surface. In areas where the ink was laid down heavy, the acids had eaten through the 'paper', leaving small holes.

Walt, Bev and I were stunned by our surroundings. The history in this small room was overwhelming, it was as if we had uncovered a truly buried treasure. It was with more than a little sadness that we eventually ended our tour. An e-mail from Dr. Weiler suggested that another visit after his return to America would yield much more data and a promise to see the things that were packed away.

I selfishly find it sad the old place slipped away from the Woodward family. I'm very grateful that the Weiler's have chosen to keep the artifacts with the house and leaving it much the way it has always been. And I hope one day I can return to visit this Woodward shrine and get a bit closer to the shadows that reside there. Perhaps one day someone will write a history of the house and it's occupants.

It is important to remember that his house is still being used as a private residence, it is not a museum; nor is it open to the public. Dr. Weiler was very generous in allowing us into the home, though I'm sure he would not want to make a habit of tours. For additional information on this house and it's occupants, I suggest reading Waban Early Days by Jane Bacon MacIntire (Newton Centre, Mass.: The Modern Press, 1941). If you wish to contact Dr. Weiler, please write to me at the Woodwards WeSearch address.

I can guarantee you that it will be hard to top this detour to the NGS conference, but I intend to try.

Write Your Sentimental Journey

By Maria Boling

If you have ever skimmed a pebble across a still pond or stood in the silent world of snow or daydreamed by an open window, then you have a story to tell.

When I first began to teach memoir writing, both the students and myself had no idea what an adventure we were about to begin.

We quickly discovered there is no such thing as a normal life and that we all had unique stories to tell.

If you would like to share your life stories with your family and friends, then try these simple methods:

- 1. Review picture albums and other family keepsakes. Look in your family Bible for old legal documents. Sometimes forgotten letters and postcards were placed there as bookmarks. Your local library may carry aged newspapers on microfiche that are crammed with events, even advertisements. Listen to the music, taste the foods, smell the colognes and spices of the time period about which you are writing. Don't forget to use color and be specific. In other words, don't say tree, say golden hickory. Tape old photographs, pictures and magazine ads to the wall in front of your writing space. There. There is your story. Look at it. Remember it. Write it.

Tape old photographs, pictures and magazine ads to the wall in front of your writing space

- 2. Talk to relatives and friends who may have a better memory about specific events, births and deaths. Write about your odd-ball kin. We all have them. Write about your exciting Uncle Joe, but tell of his faults too. Characters, whether fictional or true, aren't believable if they are perfect — and you know Uncle Joe had flaws. It's the nuts in the fudge that makes it interesting. Same with fruit cakes. Same with families.
- 3. Use memory joggers. Write about heirlooms, strange furniture, extraordinary jewelry, peculiar family sayings or recipes. I recently read an incredible memory a student wrote about his mother's hair. Begin with "I remember..." and try to write as long as you can. If you get stumped, start again with "I remember..."
- 4. Ease into the big stuff. Catastrophes are painful to write about. This is natural. Try this: First, recall the little details, the ill-looking wallpaper in the hospital waiting room, the taste of vending machine coffee at the police station, the stench of a fire's after-math, the revealing hole in the judge's robe. Then ease into the real reason your [you] were at the hospital, police station, fire or courtroom. This memoir-writing is more than what you remember, it is also the stuff you can't forget.

- 5. Be frank, conscientious, passionate and absurd. A person who writes with the intention of hurting others will never succeed. Good folks can write about depravity, but evil persons have no idea what good is and, therefore, are unable to record a memory honestly. We have an inclination to beef up our lives and accomplishments and we also have a tendency to skim over our misfortunes. Writing about your past, passions and plagues is not therapy, but therapeutic. And don't forget we all can be foolish, even silly. Play. Have fun. Enlist buffoonery. Have a person review your story/stories whom you trust and who is knowledgeable in the writing field and also has that all-important sense of humor.

Bear in mind an unused memory fades. If you allow the reminiscence bouquets of your biography to remain untold, they will wither and die. There will be no word-flowers for future generations. Your life stories have been well lived and, unlike Adam and Eve, you, no matter what your age, have a past. Your unique recollection already has a plot and you are the protagonist. So go ahead, forget the long years and start your sentimental journey with the brief moments.

[Editor's note: Your editor has often suggested writing your family stories as one means of leaving a legacy for your descendants. When this article, by Marie Boling, a creative writing teacher, appeared in the local paper, it was clear the article should be shared with readers of WOODWARDs WeSearch. It is hoped that many of you will try the techniques suggested herein and start writing a sentimental journey or two. Ms. Boling has graciously allowed us to reprint her words as they appeared in the Pickens County Progress (Jasper, Georgia) on 31 August 2000]

Obituary Daily Times

This summer I was introduced to the Obituary Daily Times site on the World Wide Web.

Http://obits.rootsweb.com/~obituary

The Obituary Daily Times is a daily index of published obituaries. It is distributed FREELY and often over 2500 entries a day are added. A search engine allows us to search for keywords to obtain some information. However, please be aware that the obituary itself is not available on this site. Every obituary is not included – volunteers are need to submit entries from local papers.

Obviously, I could not resist checking to see how many “hits” would result from a search for Woodward (or Woodard). There were 1342 hits on 10 April 2000 and 1581 hits on 13 Sep 2000 for Woodward alone. The resulting entries include locations with the name Woodward (e.g. Woodward, Iowa) as well as given names, maiden names and surnames of that spelling. The alpha characters at the end of each entry represent the volunteer contributor.

Obituary of Romona H. Woodward

contributed by Peter F. Wells

Source: The Union Leader, Manchester, NH 20 July 2000, page A6

Groveton - Romona H. "Mona" Woodward of 11 Rich Street died July 19, 2000, in her home after a brief illness.

Born in Lancaster on April 20, 1937, she was the daughter of Lawrence and Mildred M. (Smith) Gonyer. She lived most of her life in the Groveton area.

In 1956 she graduated from Groveton High School.

Before retiring, Mrs. Woodward worked for S&W Market in Groveton.

Mrs. Woodward was a communicant of St. Francis Xavier Church, Groveton, and a member of the Daughters of Isabella.

Family members include her husband of 44 years, David E. Woodward of Groveton; three sons, Rick Woodward and Corey Woodward, both of Groveton, and Alan Woodward of Dover; a daughter, Debra Montgomery of Groveton; six grandchildren; five brothers, John Gonyer of Maidstone, Vt., Jim Gonyer and Thomas Gonyer, both of Groveton, Roland Gonyer of Windsor, Vt., and Larry Gonyer of Bow; three sisters, Marilyn Cronk of Chicopee, Mass., Natalie Nutting of Granby, Mass., and Pauline Papineau of Lebanon.

A Mass of Christian burial will be celebrated Friday at 10 a. m., in St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church in Groveton. Memorial donations may be made to the Zofran Fund . . . or the American Cancer Society.
